Across the World, 1000's of millions (WOW! Big number) of people are self-isolating, self-distancing or out there working in many different roles to fight Coronavirus (all of our healthcare & support staff) or keep the country going in the background (food production & delivery, distribution of goods, transport networks etc). Within that massive number, over 300 million children are living through this too.

Lots of children like to draw and they are fantastic at sharing what they are thinking or how they are feeling through the creation of pictures.

We'd love it if anybody would like to put pens, pencils, crayons, paints, pastels, biro (?) to paper and share some images of what coronavirus means to you.

Adults - let the left side of your brain go wild adults and unleash yourself onto paper.

Kids – you know what to do – drawing is something you do most days in school – yes, doodling in the middle of Maths on a Friday afternoon counts as drawing!

It can be anything at all. It might be how this is making you feel, drawing the impact it's had on your life, creating something encouraging or to make other people laugh or smile or a thank you picture or poster for someone that's really helping you right now.

Here's my 'effort' – you can see that you don't need to be a fine art graduate – just get some thoughts down in picture form – I'd love to see them shared here, if we get enough, we'll make a Claire House Coronavirus Comic 😊
